I commend the Society for Financial Awareness (SOFA) and their volunteer speakers for providing a valuable service to organizations desiring to educate their membership on financial matters.

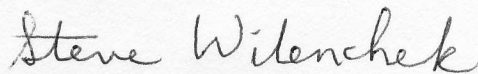

I have attended presentations on two different subjects by different speakers. The first dealt with Social Security, and was particularly interesting to people nearing the age when they become eligible for benefits.

The other program concerned financial blunders, and was presented by Bill Romeo, a specialist in financial planning. Mr. Romeo is an outstanding speaker who pointed out many pitfalls to avoid in handling one's financial affairs.

Both programs were free of sales pitches for any particular product or course of action. It was most refreshing to receive impartial information delivered without any "ax to grind."

I understand that SOFA offers programs on many different financial subjects, and would encourage anyone wishing to learn more about any of these subjects to contact Bill Romeo for more information.

Sincerely,

Steve Wilenchek
